

Web www.sci

ARTICLE

Researchers at Barrow Neurological Institute resolve 40-year eye movement, visibility controversy

For more than 40 years, a scientific controversy has raged over whether microsaccades, rapid eye movements that occur when a person's gaze is fixated, are responsible for visibility. Research conducted at Barrow Neurological Institute in Phoenix has recently resolved the debate, establishing that microsaccades are indeed responsible for driving 80 percent of our visual experience.

Added: 2006.01.19 15:30:33

Source: url

See also: Wikipedia: Česky | Deutsch | English | Español | Français | Italiano | Lietuvių

Ads by Google

Executive Recovery Help

Alcohol and Drug Treatment Designed For www.CapoByTheSea.com

Mad Cow

Great deals on Mad Cow Shop on eBay a www.eBay.com

BrookHaven Retreat

A unique, non-locked residential addiction for women
www.brookhavenretreat.com

Addiction To Pain Killers

Time to End The Nightmare w/o High Hos Contact Us!
www.MeditoxOfPalmBeach.com